Program Description

The UIS English Department emphasizes the humanistic endeavors of reading, writing, and studying texts in a variety of genres across cultures and times; the connection between critical and literary reading and a range of academic, professional, and creative pursuits; students' participation in the creation of knowledge in many literary modalities and media; and the connection between civic life and the study of composition and literary texts.

The English program at the University of Illinois at Springfield offers students a wide range of courses, a highly qualified faculty, and class sizes that facilitate individual exchange and attention. Students may choose courses that can help them prepare for teaching careers, for jobs as editors and writers, or for graduate work. The program offers a wide range of traditional British, American, and World literature courses, courses focusing on a variety of topics and themes within literature, and writing courses.
